Clare.

After a protracted illness and at an advanced age, the great grief of his parishioners and of all who knew him, the Rev. Lawrence J. Brown, P. P., Doonbeg, Father Brown was a sterling nationalist, and in past days took a prominent part in the popular struggles. On the receipt of the news in Killybegs all the business houses in the town were shut.

Carlow.

Most Rev. Dr. Foley recently conferred sub-deaconship on the following students of St. Patrick's Ecclesiastical college: Rev. D. J. Connelley, Rockford, Chicago; Rev. John Kehoe, B. A., Sydney, Australia, and Rev. M. Galvin, Los Angeles, Cal.

Cork.

A very interesting ceremony took place in the pretty chapel attached to the South Presentation convent, when Miss Mollie O'Callaghan (in religion Sister M. Dominic), daughter of the late Edmund O'Callaghan, Great George's street, West, Cork, took her final vows. The religious ceremony was performed by the Most Rev. Dr. O'Callaghan, O. P.

Donegal.

The Most Rev. Dr. O'Donnell has made the following changes in his diocese: Rev. Anthony Gallagher, Gweedore to Glenfin; Rev. John Cunningham, Doe to Gweedore; Rev. D. Canning, Arannore to Doe; Rev. J. McIntyre to Arannore; Rev. James McShane, Glenies to Donegal; Rev. Arthur O'Driscoll, Glenumbriel to Edinfinagh (Glenies); Rev. Bernard Sweeney to Glenumbriel; Rev. Hugh Boyle to Carrigart; Rev. John Crumley to Killynord.

Tipperary.

In the cemetery of the ecclesiastical which has been laid out in the grounds of St. Mary's of the Rosary, Nenagh, a very handsome monument has just been erected over the grave of the Most Rev. Daniel Vaughan, a former bishop of Killaloe. Over a double path of unpolished limestone and six polished squares of marble, with panels of the same intervening, and supporting a polished entablature, on which rests a very fine sepulchral cross of the same material. On the polished arch supporting square blocks are engraved, in bold relief, Irish crosses at the four corners and on the middle square, the Book of Pry. On the edges of the entablature is an inscription in Latin, of which this is a translation: "Pray for the soul of Most Rev. Daniel Vaughan, bishop of Killaloe, whose remains lie here. In the hope of a glorious resurrection. He died July 23, 1859, in the sixty-ninth year of his age and the eighth of his Episcopacy."

At the convent, Chigwell, recently, there took place the impressive ceremonies of clothing and profession of two Nenagh ladies, Miss M. Nolan (Sister Edith), daughter of Mr. R. Nolan, Beechwood, and Miss T. O'Donohue (Sister Frances), daughter of Mr. T. O'Donohue, Queen street. After the ceremony the clergy and visitors were entertained by the Rev. Mother and community.

In the chapel of the Presentation convent, cashel, a few days ago, Miss Josie Hennessy, daughter of Mr. M. Hennessy, Annacherry, took the veil, her name in religion being Sister M. Alphonsus.

Forgotten Part of Ireland.

To illustrate old-time Irish life in that part of Ireland separated from the mainland by a narrow strip of sea where mingle the waters of Clew bay and Black sea, and which is called Achill Island, the writer of this sketch can adduce much evidence.

Here the everyday language of the people, the only language of many of them, is the Gaelic tongue. It is first learned by the children, who may be heard chatting glibly in its liquid accents after school hours with one another, or with their mothers and white old Irish grandmothers at home. Their isolation has enabled this people to preserve the ancient Irish manners and customs, the simplicity and lively faith whereby somebody said they "see through the veil," and have won the title of "children of eternity." Many of the older inhabitants have never set foot on the mainland, have never seen a railway train or a town, and in the midst of their native hills, live and die, of whom we may say with the poet: "Along the cool sequestered vale of life They kept the even tenor of their way."

One girl, only a few years ago, came from there to New York City in the belief of her fellow mortals being ignorant in any other color than white. She didn't have long to wait there, when, behold! the plager appeared, and the poor innocent girl was seized with such a fright on seeing her only idea of the devil materialized before her, as nearly ended her life. She has seen many such apparitions since then.

However, without treating profusely of this aspect of life in Ireland's largest island, it will abundantly appear from what has to be said, that it is a little bit of an island.

Achill, "land of moor and mountain," is supposed to derive its name from the eagles that still make their haunts around the tops of its wild, picturesque mountains. In the island itself, 35,000 acres in extent, as well as on the mainland adjoining it, there are several hills of considerable height. Four of these—Curraume, Sileve Mor, Crochan and Menau—are the glory of Achill Island, and seem to account in large measure for the extraordinary love of its 7,000 people for their island home.

Curraume, the only one of the four on the mainland—which is only a short distance from the island—3,750 feet high and commands a magnificent view of Clew bay, with its myriad islands, the home of Grania Eile, From Curraume's summit the eagles now and again swoop down to carry off the fowl and young lambs from the peasants inhabiting its sides.

Sileve Mor, within the island, at its northwestern extremity, justifies its name of "big mountain" by raising its head only a few feet above that of its neighbor and rival, Crochan, which, almost 2,000 feet high, with the aid of its trees in the ocean, has some of the finest cliff scenery in Europe. The "big mountain," which presents a conical appearance when viewed from the island, impresses the spectator from the sea with the conviction that half its mass must have at one time slipped into the Atlantic, which roars and tumbles around it. It shelters from the Atlantic storms a beautiful village called the "colony" or settlement which calls for further mention. Further inland there is a large space sacred to Irish archaeologists, containing in the shape of a Druid's altar various cromlechs and stone circles, some of the most interesting archaeological remains in Ireland. Keltic scholarship has not yet said the last word on these wonders of a dim antiquity, but there is a consensus of opinion to claim this as a pagan cemetery "where lie the mighty bones of ancient men." Some years ago, while excavations were being made in the neighborhood, human bones of giant proportions were unearthed and were immediately carried off by a gentleman of antiquarian tastes who happened to be about the place. On the evening of that day a storm, such as rarely visits even the storm-swept island, was let

The Divorce Evil.

While the Apostolic Delegate was in Chicago for the consecration of Bishop Dunne, he was asked to give his opinion as to the greatest evil in this country, and its remedies. He said in part: "I consider the prevalence of divorce the greatest of this country's evils, and the greatest menace to the United States. The misuse of wealth is, perhaps, the root of most of the country's evils, and by which great wealth is often obtained constitute another great evil. Healthy public opinion, good laws, temperance and the practical righteousness inculcated by the moral teachings of religion are the remedies for divorce, for the misuse of wealth and the other social and industrial evils. Of course the greatest of these remedies is religion."

His Excellency was inclined to take an optimistic view, however, of all the vital problems confronting the American people. "I believe this wonderful nation will prove capable of solving all its puzzling problems," he said. "Though the divorce court antics of the rich and the near-rich are demoralizing, it is a great thing to find so very many rich putting immense sums of their money to philanthropic, charitable, scientific and religious uses. The misuse of great wealth is generally found among the rich young people who have no brains. It must be said, however, that there is some improvement even among the silly rich of the younger generation. This I attribute to the steady growth of religious belief and the manifest decline of irreligion."—The Pilot.

Senator Gore's Chicken Yarn.

Senator Gore of Oklahoma is given credit for this story, told on his recent visit to a Methodist convention at St. Joseph. It is related by the Rev. Mr. Williams, pastor of the Baptist church of Pleasant Hill, who happened to hear it.

According to Senator Gore, there was an accomplished hen with a brood of chickens—five roosters and five pullets. The chicks matured and went their various ways, while the mother hen busied herself with a new brood. In course of time Methodist ministers came into the vicinity of Chickenville to hold a conference, and, as might be suspected, the five young roosters, fat, yellow-legged and extremely tender, were feasted upon by various and sundry preachers.

The young pullets, left behind, were met by the mother hen a day or so later. "My children," she asked, "where are you brothers?" "They have entered the ministry," replied the young roosters. "Bracing herself from the shock of disclosure a look of resignation spread over Biddy's countenance as she replied: "Well, my dears, perhaps it is all for the best. They would not have made very good lay members, anyway."—Kansas City Star.

Autumn Song.

(From an Ode by John Keats.)
Season of mists and yellow fruitlessness,
Close bosom-friend of the maturing sun;
Conspiring with him how to load and bless
With fruit and vines that round the thatch-eves run;
To bend with apples the moss'd cottage-trees,
And fill all fruit with ripeness to the core;
To swell the gourd, and plump the hazel-shells,
With a sweet kernel; to set budding more,
And still more, later flowers for the bees,
Until they think warm days will never cease,
For summer has o'er-brimmed their clammy cells.

Who has not seen thee oft amid thy store?
Sometimes whoever seeks abroad may find
Thee sitting careless on thy granary floor,
Hail soft lifted by the winnowing wind;
Or on a half-reap'd furrow sound asleep,
Drows'd with the fume of poppies while they hook
Spare the next swath and all its twined flowers,
And sometimes like a gleaner thou dost keep
Steady thy laden head across a book;
Or by a cider-press, with patient look
Thou watchest the last oozing hours of hours.

Extreme Fashions Denounced.

Frivolous, gaudy and other varieties of women's dress are actively outside the home, were dealt with in terms of withering scorn by Rev. Father Michael of the Passionist Academic Institute of Norwood Park in an address at the Illinois theatre, in Chicago, recently.

Women were declared to be by nature absolutely unfitted for the right of suffrage. Women who parade about in large hats, apparently with their souls in the hat feathers, Father Michael classed as women who leave the foliage of the social tree.

Father Michael's subject was "The Ideal Woman." The address was given under the auspices of the Daughters of Isabella.

"The crowning height of woman's elevation can only be attained within her own sphere, and never in that of man," said Father Michael. "Any attempt, therefore, on the part of woman to overlap the boundaries of her sex and to become manish is as absurd as an attempt by man to become girlish or womanish."

"Woman's ability and usefulness does not consist in turning politician nor working for equal suffrage nor seeking office. The logic of these people who are called suffragettes is utterly untenable."

"Women know nothing of political life and the depths of its intrigues. Apparently they also know nothing of their own nature and care less about virtue and nobility."

Dooley on the Polar Controversy.

Dooley's summing up of the Peary-Cook controversy goes straight to the core of the matter: "Dye think" asked Mr. Hennessy, "that both these lads have discovered the North Pole?" "Faith, I don't know," said Mr. Dooley. "Anytime they have discovered it or they've invented it." "Who do I think gets the honor of being there first?" "Faith, I'm not going to decide. As Cook says, 'the honor is great enough for both, and there's little enough left, as it is. If th' Dock wasn't th' first there he was th' first to say he was, and I ain't sure that it don't take more courage to be th' first to say that you want there than it does to be the first to go there. I believe him both. I don't see any reason for not believin' him. It's easier to believe him than not. I extend me hand to both of them. I say: 'I congratulate you both on all you have done. No, no; don't show me any proofs. If ye've got to prove it, it ain't so. But if ye'd come to me years ago I wud've told ye all about it an' ye might've been at wurruk all this time at some useful occupation.'"
